ROCK

CORNERSTONE

Austria may be known for Haydn and Mozart but Cornerstone are here to rock.

"I think 'Rise And Shine' is one of the best songs on our album and therefore we wanted to attract new attention and interest - that's why we re-recorded the video," explains vocalist/bassist Michael Wachelhofer when being asked about their recent video release. Having signed to American label ATOM in 2008 and released their debut 'Head Over Heels' in the same year, the quartet have been touring constantly, be it playing shows in the US or treading the boards festival stages across Europe. And they've already been working on a new record, reveals Michael: "To be honest, at the moment there are just a few song ideas but nothing is one hundred percent finished. The title 'Reflections' is no more than a working title. I'm quite sure that this may change, we'll see. Great things always take a while." Mixing '80s rock with the harder edge of today's alternative sounds as on latest record 'Somewhere In America', their upcoming album goes a step into the AOR direction according to Michael: "Our debut 'Head Over Heels' was pretty much an alternative album with a bit of AOR in it. On 'Somewhere' we've turned that combination around because when you're around thirty, it isn't that exciting anymore to do tunes like 'Changed' - four chords and a bit of 'Fuck you too'. I wanted to create something more mature and I guess it worked out fine. This doesn't mean that the new album will be 'Somewhere in America Mk II' but the direction is probably the same. Maybe we'll work with a new producer to try a different sound." "At the moment, we're working on the new songs in the rehearsal room," adds vocalist Patricia Hillinger: "At the same time we have to prepare for upcoming gigs. Although it can be very exhausting to combine touring and recordings, every effort will be worth it." "It's also very exciting," says Michael: "It's unbelievable what can happen to songs - thinking back on when Steve (guitarist) and I created some acoustics in my living room. 'Right Or Wrong' was such a big metamorphosis. Originally conceived as a duet, we decided that Patricia should sing this solo. In the end, the song was chosen as 'Ballad Of 2011' by a UK rockzine, so something went right I guess". Regarding the theme of the new album, one thing Patricia points out is that it's not going to deal with aliens conquering Mars: "Michael and Steve write the songs together and they do a great job. Concerning lyrics and melody, they form a perfect creative unity. After they provide a base for the album, we all come together and rehearse til midnight." With a current tour across home country Austria, the quartet cannot wait until they hit UK shores again - if only for the English breakfast: "We already hit the UK two times this year - we played a tour and a festival in Liverpool. But as the UK is our most important market, we'll be definitely back in the beginning of next year," says Patricia: "We're going to play a lot more concerts than last year and that is what I'm most excited about."
