In 2013, UK Booker, Nick Brown was diagnosed with Cystic Fibrosis while booking a UK tour for Austrian Band Cornerstone. Seeing first-hand the effect the disease had on the lives of their friend the band decided to raise money to help those suffer with CF in the Nottingham community.

Small Town Boy is the product of that effort, to help with the building of a state-of-the-art centre for Cystic Fibrosis (CF) sufferers at Nottingham University Hospitals NHS Trust (NUH). Small Town Boy aims to raise enough money to ensure the centre can help create a new benchmark for hospital care, both locally and nationally.

Cystic Fibrosis patients are a unique group of young people who require a wide range of different treatment to manage their illness. One aspect of the condition is that patients cannot mix with other sufferers due to the risk of cross-infection. This means they miss out on support from meeting with and talking to other people with the same condition, leaving them feeling isolated and segregated. Around half of the CF population can expect to live over 38 years, although improvements in treatments mean a baby born today could expect to live even longer.

"The lyrics of the song hit the CF-topic quite perfectly. You might feel as an outsider, no one cares about you, people treat you like an alien, and this probably makes you want to 'run away' and find a cure. We immediately saw that connection", says Steve, "and I really hope we can earn enough money, to keep our friend Nick Brown alive as long as possible."
